LyreBird, Tales of Helpmann, Invasion Wines Presents

Review: Mr. Coppin and Invasion Wines have given Sacramento a great gift of playing host to the US Premiere of this truly outstanding play. He gives us a glimpse into the fascinating life and character of Sir Robert Helpmann with nothing short of a brilliant performance. His technique has such depth, that the subtlest details of his rich physicality and range of vocal inflection are never overlooked making the smallest moments effective again and again. The comedic bits are not only written in all the right spots, but they are executed with pinpoint accuracy and timing. Likewise, the tenderly played moments of personal struggle and social awareness create a wonderful balance for the audience to experience the journey along with Coppin's tales of Helpmann. I am not one to go about a performance or play, but this Broadway/West End caliber production should not be missed if you have the time and the means to get there.

Review: I originally was leary and skeptical about a one-man play, but Tyler Coppin did a fine job of writing and performing this wonderful theatrical experience. The fervor he puts into the part is outstanding. The story is funny, thought-provoking and informative. I knew nothing about Sir Helpmann until I saw the play.

Review: We thought it was wonderful. Not only was it well written but yhe acting and physical effort that Tyler Coppin put into it was outstanding. He is a great talent and should be exposed to the American theater-goers.

Review: This Show was Great! Sacramento is so lucky to have Tyler Coppin return to his home town and perform Lyrebird. Whatever you plans for this weekend you should change them and go and see this show. Jeffrey Trotter San Francisco. You will laugh your ass off!

Review: What a performance! For any aspiring theatre artist, whether writer/producer/stage manager/ or performer this is a tour de force not to be missed. A pure lassion in theatrical magic. Calling all Sacramento theatre junkies: Get ye to the 24th Street Theatre to see Tyler Coppins show!
