Throwing Parties, B Street Theatre

Review: Almost as bad as Loone.....one has to wonder whom is responsible for the productions at the B. The increased ticket price is further insult.

Review: I saw the preview of this show last week. Myself and the three others I went with were very pleased overall with the show. The writing and storylines were solid and there were a lot of comic moments. For the most part, the actors were also very solid. I thought that the actress who played the daughter was a little too much on the dull side and needed to enliven her character more. I think this is a worthy production and would recommend it.

Review: Is fun and heartfelt. The acting is wonderful. So good to see Jamie Jones back! As far as a previous reviewers stab at Lune (pronounced Loony). How boring would it be if everyone did the same shows over and over. I applaud B Street for trying something different! You keep your subscribers on their toes!

Review: I went expecting a comedy--what I saw was an incomprehensible mess of a play which could not be salvaged by experienced actors. It was not reallyt funny and too confusing to be moving. I was never really sure what the point was. The "surprise ending" is unclear and pointless. A big dissapointment after B streets previous holiday plays the last two years.

Review: Lousy. Poorly written, staged, and performed. The play opens with a yelling woman and slamming doors - it hadn't been ten minutes and I already felt the onset of a headache. The story was muddled - and so was the acting. Unfortunately, if there was talent in this cast - the script ate it up and regurgitated this wreck of a show. Dropping an "F" bomb now and then did not salvage the show; was this how the writer meant it to be a comedy? It was a sad display and a waste of time if you are looking for true theater. Anyone who has given this play a positive review is most likely a member and has invested hundreds of dollars in these programs, so please take those commentaries with a grain of salt. Take my advice - take a loved one out for a nice dinner and catch a movie.

- 2 Hours Lost and $116 Poorer.
